Ford Explorer Sport Trac is usually referred to as Ford Sport Trac and was manufactured and marketed in the United States. It was put into production as the popular pickup version SOD Explorer SUV and shared its platform with the 2nd Explorer generation. The competition in the pickup truck market offers many opportunities for producers but the segment is already full of strong competitors such as the Ford F-150 and Chevy Silverado. Just like Sport Trac was put out service, SUV Explorer saw its fifth generation of scroll design from the production line. The original pickup truck was missing of any real choice of motor in the first generation, although in the second generation it was extended to 2 engine choices. The engines in the second generation were both ranging from the V8 ranging from 4.0 liters to 4.6 liters and the choice of transmission was automatic at 5 or 6 speeds. Second-generation Sport Trac has acquired many of the updates issued with the 4th Explorer generation such as the control of stability and the protection of the active rollover. Another great addition to the 2nd generation model was the inclusion of the four-wheeled independent suspension which increases both up and off-road performance. 2nd generation truck customers can choose between one of the four trims including adrenaline, limited, XLS and XLT. The Sport Trac Sport Performance adrenaline option has added a more aggressive style to the truck, even if the engine has not been updated. To view a full screen version click here.
