The same as we use just like the same thing to talk about IDTIC things: As if and as here, if and as if they are conjunctions. WhatsApp is being used by millions of users and their utility can be fastened easily by the fact that Facebook bought it for an amazing sum of $ 19 billion. Most people are quite common with the simple WhatsApp user interface, but some things maintain some of the people who guess. For example, the appearance of a single tick, ticks (so-called check marks) and the clock icon in the sent message bubbles are mysterious with several people. We will understand what these ticks mean (check marks) and the clock icon on whatsapp. Meaning of a single tick (check mark) When you send someone a message through whatsapp, in the first stage of travel, the message travels from your mobile phone to the whatsapp server. By the way, did you know that now whatsapp can also be easily used on a desktop computer or portable computer? When single tick is displayed in the lower right corner of the message chat bubble, meaning that the message has reached the WhatsApp server. This tick icon is shown as an indication for the sender that the message had successfully delivered through the mobile network of the sender on the WhatsApp server. More interesting things: greatOnline status messages for WhatsApp. Meaning of Double Mark (checkmark) The arrival of your message on WhatsApp Server is only half of the journey. After receiving the message, WhatsApp Server sends it to the receiver's mobile device. When the message is delivered to the receiver, the single tick icon becomes an overlapping double tick icon. WhatsApp Tick Marks conveys important information about your message. Double Tick Indicates that your message has reached the receiver's device: "However, this does not mean that the receiver has read it. Reading a WhatsApp message is shown by blue markers. You can get a rough idea of whether the receiver has read your message by seeing your "lost" time stamp. But remember, there's a way to hide the last time stamp seen. If the receiver has chosen to hide their "seen", they will not get information about when it was last online. Meaning of the clock icon as soon as you send the message to someone on WhatsApp: you can at some point see a clock icon in the lower right corner of the chat bubble. This icon means that the message is still waiting to leave your mobile device. It means that the message has not yet started its journey to WhatsApp Server. The clock icon usually appears when the network connection is slow. It is an indication that the message is waiting on your phone and as soon as WhatsApp gets mobile internet connectivity with enough bandwidth: the message will be sent to the server. Sometimes the clock icon sticks and refuses to disappear. It simply suggests that something is wrong somewhere along the network path. You should check your internet connection, if the clock icon has been there for quite some time. By the way, this is a good time to act if you realize you've sent the message to the wrong person! If the clock icon changes to a single tick, you can stop a WhatsApp message. As soon as the network allows the message to reach the server. The clock icon will become a single tick. From then on, single single It will double-click the message when the message reaches the receiver's phone. What if no icon appears at all? If no icon appears in the lower right corner of the message bubble, the reasons are that your Internet connection does not work. Take a look! This was the story of WhatsApp Marks. But in case you were really looking for the meanings of WhatsApp Smiley and other symbols, I have written a separate article for that too. I hope this solves the mystery of individual and double check marks, as well as the watch icon in WhatsApp. Leave me, please know your comments about this! An adverb clause is a group of words that function as an adverb in a prayer. Adverb clauses can be used to add explanatory details to your writing and explain how or why things happen. To identify the adverb clauses, you must understand what an adverb does, as well as how a clause is formed. Explore basic concepts and review examples of different types of adverb clauses. WARNING CLAUSES Examples An adverb is a part of the speech that describes an adjective, another adverb, or a verb. Adverbs give more information on how an action was done. In general, they answer questions like, how, why, where, and when. An adverb can do this on its own, with one word, as illustrated by examples of adverbs in prayers. Word groups (phrases or clauses) that work as adverbs can also perform this function in prayers. She walked slowly. She walked like an old woman. (Phrase of adverb) She walked like she was heading to the gallows. (Clausula de adverbio) In each of these prayers, the bold word or group of words responds to the question "How?" and describes the verb "caminos". When reviewing the difference between phrases and clauses, consider examples enumerated of words are used together to function as an adverb in a prayer. she walked like an old woman. (phrase) she walked as if she was heading to the gallows. (clause) The clauses may be independent or dependent. Independent clauses are complete sentences, so that's not what adverb clauses are. Dependent clauses, also known as subordinate clauses, cannot in themselves constitute a complete sentence. The adverb clauses are a type of dependent clause. They are distinguished from other types of dependent clauses because they function as an adverb. In the examples below, the dependent clauses are in bold and the independent clauses are underlined. Because he has a college degree, he got a great job. When the storm started, she was in the store. Bob was wearing a coat I gave him. Each of the dependent clauses (marked in bold) has a subject and a verb, but it is not a complete prayer for itself. They depend on an independent clause for their meaning. Independent clauses (emphasis added) can be worth alone as grammatically complete sentences, but are improved in more detail by adding dependent clauses. The adverb clauses, also known as adverb clauses, are dependent clauses that function as adverbs. This means that the adverb clauses have a subject and a verb and serve to describe an adjective, a verb or another adverb. Since the adverb clauses are dependent clauses, they must have a subordinate conjunction that connects them with the rest of the sentence. Being able to detect a subordinate conjunction will help you recognize an adverb clause. Several examples of subordinate conjunctions are listed below. They are grouped by what kind of question they answer: when - then when, until, soon, once, while, so soon, when, for the time how - yes or no, always, in case, less, even if, in the case why - because, as, from, so, to that, now that, to the extent that - where, where, where, where the adverb clauses can be placed the half or end of a sentence. When placed at the beginning or in the middle, they require a comma to compensate for the rest of the sentence. When the adverb clause is at the end of a sentence, no comma is needed. In the examples below, the adverb clause and the associated punctuation are bold. start placement (comma required) - Whether you like it or not, you have to go. Average placement (commas required) - The boy, although very bright, failed mathematics. Final placement (no comma) - He enjoyed the party more than he did. Because they act as adverbs in a sentence, adverb clauses usually answer questions of where, when, why and how in a sentence. The examples given below are organized by which the adverb clause answers the question. The adverb clause is bold in each. Adverbial clauses usually provide information about where something is happening. Use this type of adverb clause when you are trying to explain the location of something so that you are being very clear on the exact location. Where there's music, people will dance. You can come visit us where we stayed this summer. We will stay at the hotel where the spa is located. The large field, where the corn is planted, needs to be sown. The adverbial clauses below answer the question when. Use this type of adverb clause when you are discussing time. They are appropriate for when you want to clarify the timeframe within which something will have, has or is expected to take place. After the chores, we'll eat ice cream. When the clock hits midnight, you have to go. The tomatoes on the vine, when they have a lot of rain, will separate. I get headaches when I go too long without eating. The adverb clauses below are examples of those that answer the question why. Use this type of adverb clause when you are providing an explanation of the cause or purpose for something, both of which explanations or justifications for the result. He passed the course because he worked hard. 'Cause she got stuck Recommended diet, its blood pressure and azucar in the blood decreased. So that he did not ruin the carpet, he took off his shoes. (PIPE) eats vegetables to stay healthy. (PROPOSITE) The adverb clusters below answer question how. Within this category, there are condition clauses and concession clauses. The condition clauses specify what should occur for something, while the concession clauses specify what has occurred despite a circumstance that seems to indicate that there should have been a different result. If you save some money, you can buy a new game. (Condition) Unless you hurry, you'll be late to school. (Condition) Although you have 13 years, you can not go to that movie. (Concession) Although you gave your best effort, you did not win the game. (Concession) While adverb clauses are a bit more complicated than independent adverbs, they are very useful to adhere more rich details to their writing explaining how things happen. When you start at the subordinating conjunctions and dependent clauses to your writing, you add it for varying the rhythm of your prayers. Layering in important information through adverb clauses helps create a complete image for the reader. Explore examples of adverb clauses to obtain a sense of many ways that these descriptors can be used to improve their writing. M.A. English
