Starting today, you can take the category of Google Assistant. "Stellar a story" Works on the road with you. The feature has rolled to Google Home last year and allows you to say "Hey Google, tell me a story" To trigger your home of Google, Mini, Hub or Max to tell your child a Quick Tale. Now, that same feature is available for iOS and Android devices. To get it, I just want to make sure your device has the latest version of Google Assistant installed. A latest version, listening to a story is as easy as just telling your phone, "Google, tell me a story" or "Google Google, tell me a story of Bedtime." If you are looking for To get the kids to go to sleep already. Google is rolling the function this week in anticipation of the National Tell a Story Day on April 27th. You can still ask your Google's home to tell you a story, of course. Google Home also has a feature Call "Lead together" that you will play sound effects for some books while you read them. Originally launched in October last year, but did not get a lot of attention. In order for the function of the sound effects of the work, it is necessary to have one of the supported books, which are all the golden books related to Disney. The sounds are synchronized while you read and you can jump forward and back with you, or even take a break while chatting what you just read. While it's simple in the concept, I think if it was in circulation when I was a child, he would burn my mind. Here is a video in action: once you have one of the supported books, you activate the characteristic by saying: "Google, read together with Disney." The function works only on Google Home devices, not smartphone, but it works for a SLEW of Disney titles, including classics like Peter Pan, Cinderella and Alice in Wonderland, as well as new favorites like frozen, Coco and Moana. If nothing else, "a story" Characteristic on the phone could help you entertain Kiddos for a few minutes more during your next shopping trip. We are not completely blinded by news - Going back to November, a beta version of the Google app Assistant Assist Assist for Android tablet - But it's nice to finally hear him from El Goog himself. According to the company through his official blog, the assistant will be just as powerful as on smartphones, with features like setting reminders, adding articles to t ua shopping list and checking your intelligent devices all accounted. In an interesting bonus, also Google announced that assistant is made way to smartphones by running the Android 5.0 lollipop. Previously, assistant was supported only on phones that run, to the oldest, Android 6.0 Marshmallows. About 26 percent of Android devices run lollipops, and given the weakness of Google to want you as assistant as possible as possible devices as possible, this move is not completely unprecedented. Google Assistant can synchronize your smart home gadgets now if the server will be useful in tablet it's another story. Not ignoring the fact that Samsung, Huawei, and Lenovo continue to push out Android tablet, but the Android tablet market in general seems to be in an embarrassing position, see how the chromebooks arrived.
